A Message From Robert Miller

The Book of James

This fall, our church is doing a deep dive into the book of James. I have really enjoyed studying the book of James in my preparation for sermons. Our small groups are also studying the book of James. We are using the video series on Right Now Media featuring the teaching of Frances Chan. The book of James is timely for us. It was written to early Christians who were being persecuted for their faith and going through a famine. Our world is going through difficult times. Many Christians are being persecuted throughout the world. Even in America, Christians are being belittled because of our faith. The pandemic and natural disasters are wreaking havoc on our physical, emotional, and spiritual beings. Let's learn from James how to handle these unprecedented times!

It is not too late to start a small group. If you have access to the internet, then you can download Right Now Media. The Book of James Bible study is on there. We have printed out a study guide that can be used for your group discussion. Most of our small groups are already going, but you can start a group of your own. Several of our members are starting new groups. We have adopted the small group model from Saddleback Church that encourages people to start their own groups and find people they trust to meet with each other. This tends to create better and more honest discussion. I hope you will consider being part of a group.
